For women living in between who they are and who they are becoming.

Jen J Kelly is a writer, speaker and former pastor who lives in Chicagoland with her husband and three daughters. She earned a B.A. in Biblical Studies from Colorado Christian University in 2017 and has studied toward an M.Div. at Fuller Theological Seminary. After years in ministry, Jen now writes and speaks to women living in between who they are and who they are becoming.

Jen is known for her warm vulnerability, her gift for naming what women feel but don't say, and her honest take on how the Gospel shapes restorative, Spirit-filled living. It won't take you long to notice her love for crazy family adventures, and her random bursts of laughter make her messages meaningful and memorable.

In 2026 she released To Him Who Is Able, a free 12-week devotional. She is currently writing The Worth of Me, a book for mothers and daughters about where our ideas of worth come from and how to stop handing down the wrong ones.
